North Philly boxer Hart to take the ring in Vegas

Fight of his life. CityPaper profiled local boxer Jesse Hart — who will box at the MGM Grand in Las Vegas Saturday.

Jesse "Hard Work" Hart trains at Joe Hand Boxing Gym. / MARIA POUCHNIKOVA

A small of group of people has assembled around one of two rings at the Joe Hand Boxing Gym in Northern Liberties. The bell goes off, and the fighter, 6-foot-3 Jesse Hart, strides to the center of the ring.

The match is only a training bout — four, four-minute rounds — but important nonetheless for Hart. After three years as a professional boxer, Hart is the reigning North American Boxing Federation (NABF) junior super middleweight champion, with a 16-0 record and 13 victories by knockout or technical knockout. Now the 25-year-old fighter from North Philly is preparing to fight on his biggest stage yet: the undercard bout to the Floyd Mayweather Jr.-Manny Pacquiao fight at the MGM Grand in Las Vegas on May 2.

Against undefeated Chicago boxer Mike Jimenez, Hart will fight his first 10-round match for the vacant United States Boxing Association (USBA) super middleweight title. Hart has been spending extra time in Joe Hand since mid-March, when his promoter — Bob Arum of Top Rank, which is co-promoting the Mayweather-Pacquiao card — called to tell him he was picking Hart to fight on May 2. It's no small feat to be picked personally by Arum, a legend in the boxing world, who once worked with Muhammad Ali.

In the ring, Hart starts slowly, weaving in punches and feints in an intricate choreography. Hart's sparring partner, who is several inches shorter, is coming at him, working to close the distance and take away the advantage of Hart's long reach.

That's when Hart quickens his pace almost dancing in the ring. His boxing weight is 168 pounds, but he moves like a lighter fighter, and his left hand begins to float. Hart has a fast jab, affording him time to probe his opponent without putting himself in harm's way. But it also gives him the chance to talk and taunt, and his father, Eugene "Cyclone" Hart in the corner is tired of Hart wasting time.

"Use your jab and stop [BS-ing]!" he yells.

Hart turns toward Cyclone to reply —"I got him; he ain't got nothin'." Then Hart lines up a combination: two short jabs and an explosive right hook that lands squarely on the side of his opponent's head. "Woah!" Hart exclaims.

Got talent? The Pope needs volunteers for World Meeting

If you can say "Welcome to Philly" in more than one language — and even if you can't – the Archdiocese of Philadelphia might have a job for you.

The church is looking for 10,000 volunteers ahead of the Pope's visit in September for the World Meeting of Families, Sept. 22-27.

There are more than 100 potential ways to volunteer for the event. Airport greeters are needed, but so are social media support people.

Organizers say they expect strong demand for translators.

Volunteers 18-years-old or older can sign up for one day or all of them, but they'll need to attend training ahead of the event and pass a background check.

Officials with the World Meeting of Families say more volunteering opportunities will become available as the itinerary for the event is announced. That announcement is expected in early summer.

Pope Francis is expected to hold Mass on the Benjamin Franklin Parkway during the meeting. DAN KELLEY

Prof condemns media after porn snafu

In a Washington Post op-ed, Drexel law professor Lisa McElroy admitted accidentally sending her students a link to a porn movie, in a story that went viral.

McElroy was cleared of wrongdoing by Drexel. She bashed the media and the public for their interest in the incident in the op-ed.

"No one publicly questioned the dignity of the so-called journalists who wrote salacious stories ... and no one questioned the dignity of the intended audience," she wrote.

Court orders Msgr. Lynn back to jail

Monsignor William Lynn, a Catholic administrator convicted of child endangerment in 2012 for allegedly allowing sexual predators in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia to live near children and then freed from jail on appeal in 2014, has now been re-convicted by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

Lawyers for Lynn had claimed child endangerment statues didn't apply to administrators like him. METRO

Defense continues credibility attack in trial of narco cops

Defense. Lawyers for accused officers say investigation was sloppy and charges won't stick.

Chief Inspector Chris Werner walked to the stand with ramrod straight posture and a salad of medals attached to his crisp blue police uniform.

He was in federal court on Friday in an unusual position, as a witness for the defense of six former Philadelphia narcotics officers accused of stealing hundreds of thousands of dollars from drug dealers.

He testified for just a couple of hours, but when he was done, family members of the accused cops appeared to be walking a little lighter and the lawyers representing the men seemed all the more confident.

The question now is, can those defense lawyers keep it up?

In what could be the final days of the epic trial against former narcotics officers, defense attorneys plan to call numerous high-level cops in an attempt to contradict the testimony of former and not-so-former drug dealers who have testified against them for the past four weeks.

On the stand, Werner flatly contradicted some of the most damaging allegations against the cops.

Prosecutors say the accused cops kidnapped Rodolfo Blanco, stole $12,000 cash and held him in a hotel for four days after the officers found heroin and an AK-47 weapon in his home.

Werner testified there was no kidnapping. He approved Blanco's application to become a confidential informant.

"Based on the circumstances, we decided to put him in the hotel, with officers, and monitor phone calls," said Werner, who as a captain in the department oversaw the narcotics squad.

Defense lawyers called nine witnesses to the stand on Friday, pursuing a line of questioning that underscored their argument that the FBI conducted a sloppy and incomplete investigation.

Swift justice

The case continues Tuesday.

- There was no court on Monday. U.S. District Judge Eduardo Robreno has told the jury that the case could wrap up by early next week.

NE Philly. Teen boys arrested in murder of food delivery driver

Police said Monday that two boys, aged 14 and 15, were arrested in connection with the murder last week of a Chinese food delivery driver during a botched robbery.

Rendong Zheng, 49, was fatally shot around 10:30 p.m. on April 23 while making a food delivery.

Shamir Walker, 14, is charged with murder and robbery and Tyquail Duffy, 15, is charged with aggravated assault.

Police responded to a call of gunshots at 10:37 p.m. at 500 Hillcreek Drive in Crescentville, but "upon arrival, nothing additional was immediately apparent," according to a police report.

Meanwhile, across the street at 500 Adams Avenue, fire crews were responding to a single-car accident.

Police say they found Zheng in the car with a gunshot wound to his shoulder.

The pair allegedly fired 12 shots at Zheng while he was driving his car to make a food delivery.

Zheng died of his wounds en route to Einstein Hospital.

Violence erupts in Baltimore

Shut down. Schools, businesses and train stations were closed in the Maryland city of 662,000 people.

Baltimore police officers push back a protester. / GETTY IMAGES

Seven Baltimore police officers were injured on Monday as rioters threw bricks, broke windows, looted businesses and burned patrol cars in violent protests following the funeral of a black man who died after he was injured in police custody.

The riots broke out just a few blocks from the site of the funeral of 25-year-old Freddie Gray in northwest Baltimore and then spread through other parts of the city in the most violent demonstrations since looting in Ferguson, Missouri, last year.

Television images showed mobs of rioters jumping on top of a police car, destroying a taxi and setting two other patrol cars on fire after teenaged crowds ignored calls to disperse and clashed with lines of hundreds of police. Gangs had threatened to target police officers, local law enforcement said.

Gray's death on April 19 reignited a public outcry over police treatment of African-Americans that flared last year after the killings of unarmed black men in Ferguson, New York City and elsewhere. REUTERS

Hope helped kidnap survivors through ordeal

Kidnapper. Ariel Castro hanged himself after serving one month of a life sentence.

Nearly two years after they escaped the Cleveland house where they were held for years, Amanda Berry and Gina DeJesus said in a memoir published Monday that they were stronger than the former school bus driver who abducted them.

Berry and DeJesus, now 29 and 25 respectively, and Michelle Knight, now 34, escaped in May 2013 from Ariel Castro and his Cleveland house, which has since been demolished.

"We have written about terrible things that we never wanted to think about again," Berry and DeJesus said in the preface to "Hope: A Memoir of Survival in Cleveland," which describes their ordeal and their efforts to reclaim their lives.

Quoted

"Now we want the world to know: We survived, we are free, we love life. We were stronger than Ariel Castro." Berry and DeJesus

"Now we want the world to know: We survived, we are free, we love life. We were stronger than Ariel Castro."

Castro fathered a girl with Berry and violently forced Knight to miscarry multiple times. He pleaded guilty to hundreds of charges including rape, kidnapping and murder.

Knight, who Castro kidnapped first and testified at the hearing where he was given a life sentence, published a memoir last year.

Berry and DeJesus described in painful detail Castro's sexual and psychological abuse over more than 300 pages, relying heavily on 1,200 diary entries Berry wrote during her captivity. Berry initially wrote in her diary every time Castro attacked her, but said she eventually stopped counting. REUTERS

Earthquake

Aid trickles in to region

In Kathmandu, sick and wounded people were lying out in the open, unable to find beds in the devastated city's hospitals. Surgeons set up an operating theatre inside a tent on the grounds of Kathmandu Medical College.

Across the capital and beyond, exhausted families laid mattresses out on streets and erected tents to shelter from rain. People queued for water dispensed from trucks, while the few stores still open had next to nothing on their shelves.

Humanitarian agencies said materials such as plastic sheets, dry food rations, clean water and blankets were being dispatched to affected populations in the city and outside.

Some relief supplies began to trickle into the capital, a Reuters witness said. Some portable toilets had been set up and food was being provided by local aid agencies. A few United Nations vehicles were seen with medical equipment.

Thousands flee capital in Nepal

Death toll. A senior interior ministry official said fatalities could reach 5,000.

Nepalese officials scrambled on Monday to get aid from the main airport to people left homeless and hungry by a devastating earthquake two days earlier, while thousands tired of waiting fled the capital Kathmandu for the surrounding plains.

By afternoon, the death toll from Saturday's earthquake had climbed to more than 3,700, and reports trickling in from remote areas suggested it would rise significantly.

Kathmandu's Tribhuvan International Airport was hobbled by many employees not showing up for work, people trying to get out, and a series of aftershocks which has forced it to close several times since the quake.

Home Minister Bam Dev Gautam was supervising aid delivery and arranging for passengers to leave the country.

Many of Kathmandu's one million residents have slept in the open since Saturday, either because their homes were flattened or they were terrified that aftershocks would bring them crashing down.

On Monday, thousands streamed out of the city. Roads leading from Kathmandu were jammed with people, some carrying babies, trying to climb onto buses or hitch rides aboard cars and trucks to the plains. Long queues had formed at the airport.

Five things you

1 Army official: Islamic State kills five journalists working for Libyan TV

Islamic State militants have slit the throats of five journalists working for a Libyan TV station in the eastern part of the country, an army commander said on Monday.

The reporters had been missing since August, when they left the eastern city of Tobruk after covering the inauguration of the country's elected parliament to travel to Benghazi. Their route took them through Derna, a militant Islamist hotspot.

Faraj al-Barassi, a district army commander in eastern Libya, said militants loyal to Islamic State were responsible for killing the journalists, whose bodies were found outside the eastern city of Bayda.

"Five bodies with slit throats were found today in the Green Mountain forests," Barrasi told Reuters, referring to a sparsely populated area east of Benghazi. He did not say when the five journalists were believed to have been killed.

The reporters, four Libyans and one Egyptian, had been working for Barqa TV, an eastern television supporting federalism for eastern Libya, other journalists said.

Brussels-based International Federation of Journalists (IFJ), a group promoting press freedom, said the reporters had been kidnapped at an Islamic State checkpoint and were killed recently.

2 Aurora cinema massacre trial under way

Colorado's long-awaited cinema massacre trial began on Monday with jurors asked to decide whether gunman James Holmes was insane when he killed a dozen moviegoers in 2012, or a calculating mass murderer who deserves execution.

Public defenders trying to spare the life of the one-time neuroscience graduate student, and prosecutors seeking the death penalty, are set to present their opening statements in a courtroom on the outskirts of Denver.

Okla. sheriff's official resigns

The No. 2 official at the Tulsa County Sheriff's Office has resigned weeks after the fatal shooting of a suspect by a reserve deputy who said he mistakenly fired his handgun instead of his Taser, the sheriff said on Monday.

Undersheriff Tim Albin's resignation follows the release of documents into the investigation of Reserve Deputy Robert Bates, who was charged with second-degree manslaughter in the fatal shooting of Eric Harris on April 2.

The shooting has prompted investigations into whether Bates received special treatment due to his donations to the department and his personal ties to Tulsa County Sheriff Stanley Glanz. REUTERS

Storm knocks out power to New Orleans airport

A line of storms moving through Louisiana on Monday knocked out power to the New Orleans International Airport, sent train cars tumbling from an elevated bridge and left some 168,000 customers without power.

There were no immediate reports of injuries from the storms, which also left the criminal courthouse in New Orleans without power and caused several area schools, including the University of New Orleans, to cancel classes. REUTERS

MBA programs reveal what they really want to see from students

MANSOOR IQBAL

Inside look.
Admissions offices tell us their secrets.

You don't want to be a cookie-cutter applicant. / ISTOCK

Believe it or not, it is possible to show some personality in a grad school application. We asked the admissions offices of five top MBA programs what they wished applicants would do more. Here's what they said.

Isser Gallogly

Assistant dean of admissions, New York University Leonard N. Stern School of Business
"We would like to see applicants take ownership of the application process and to be accountable. Ultimately, it's your application and you need to be responsible for your part of the process. You would be surprised at the number of applicants who try to cut corners. That behavior does not put a candidate in the best light with the admissions committee."

Allison Jamison

Director of marketing and recruitment, Duke University Fuqua School of Business
"In the Fuqua application we ask applicants to share their community and leadership activities. Very often, we see individuals not spend as much time on this part of the application. We see applicants reference activities and leadership positions in their resumes and essays that are not included in the listing of activities. We are looking to see applicants be able to connect past participation in activities and leadership roles with their own potential to lead."

Crystal Grant

Head of admissions, Imperial College Business School (UK)
"One of the features of our application is the three-minute video pitch, which provides you with the perfect opportunity to set yourself apart from other candidates. This is your chance to speak to us directly. There's no one right way of approaching the video pitch, but we would really like to see more creativity and individuality from candidates. Be yourself — don't try and be what you think we want to see and hear."

Yvonne Li

Director of MBA admissions & career services, CEIBS (China)
"Some applicants may have a beautiful application package, but when we get to the interview round they perform very differently from what's on paper. Some give perfect answers to all the questions, but have no impact whatsoever because they haven't shown us who they are as individuals. They completely lose sight of what makes them unique."

1 Dave Chappelle's fans boo, demand refunds

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Reclusive comic Dave Chappelle is facing something of a PR disaster after fans at one of his recent performances in Detroit turned on him, unhappy with his act — or complete lack of one. Chappelle reportedly showed up late and spent his time on stage "quietly smoking, rambling and slurring his speech," according to TMZ. Audience members later took to Facebook to complain about the show as "a waste of money" and "horrible," and they're demanding refunds for the tickets, which sold for as much as $240. Good luck with that.

As for Chappelle? A statement from his rep is only adding insult to injury for the offended fans. "Out of the 50 shows on the tour, Thursday was definitely not his best set," his rep says. "On the flip side, the incident inspired some additional sharp-witted material and [Friday] he came back with a vengeance." Well, good for him!

2 Ian Somerhalder and Nikki Reed tie the knot

When he wasn't busy helping Metro out with our Earth Day coverage, "Vampire Diaries" star Ian Somerhalder was apparently secretly planning a wedding to fiancée Nikki Reed. Somerhalder and the "Twilight" star tied the knot in Santa Monica, California on Sunday morning, cementing their cross-franchise vampire union less than four months after getting engaged. Somerhalder marked the occasion the morning of the big event by tweeting that it was the "most beautiful morning ever." Both bride and groom wore white, whatever that means.

3 Did a messy divorce just reveal the identity of January Jones' baby daddy?

January Jones has continued to keep mum on the identity of the father of her 3-year-old son, Xander, but that's not stopping others from speculating. For instance, "Law & Order" actress Stephanie March is currently locked in a bitter divorce battle with celebrity chef Bobby Flay and reportedly thinks Flay not only cheated on her with Jones, but also fathered Xander, according to the Globe. Oh, and whoever is writing for the tabloid is really enjoying the cooking-related puns: "Steph is broiling over buzz that her 50-year-old hubby marinated the 'Mad Men' lamb chop," the tabloid's tale goes.

"After Bobby and January reportedly turned up the heat in 2010, she had a bun in the oven. Her son, Xander, was served up just a few months later. January has never revealed the name of her son's father. But, Stephanie is suspicious and the kid does look a bit like Bobby." Bravo, Globe writer. Bravo.

Nick Kroll becomes a stay-at-home sitter in "Adult Beginners." / RADIUS-TWC

Nick Kroll gets serious... sort of.

Interview. "Adult Beginners" lets the sketch comedy chameleon take the lead — and show some emotion.

Nick Kroll has made a name for himself on "Kroll Show" and "The League" for off-the-wall, outlandish comic roles, but Kroll is showing a slightly more serious side with "Adult Beginners," about a washed-up entrepreneur (Kroll) who signs up as baby-sitter for his sister (Rose Byrne) after his life implodes.

The thing that seems to catch people off-guard with this movie is how dramatic it actually becomes.
I feel like the original idea could've gone either way. You could go toward a big, broad "it's the manny!" thing. But Vin Diesel in "The Pacifier" ruined that for us. I pretty quickly knew that I wasn't interested in that kind of movie, and when I started talking to [producer] Mark Duplass about it — and the way he comes at projects — it just felt like this could be a really grounded, real story. And then when we met with Liz Flahive and Jeff Cox, who wrote the script, who have a 3-year-old son and also just gave birth to a kid literally right before we started production, there's just so much to work with. I hope the movie's funny and I hope the movie's dramatic and works, but you didn't need to do a lot of legwork on either side to make it feel resonant.

NICK KROLL
GETTY IMAGES

The supporting cast has some prime comedy talent.
We luckily peppered it with talent. Obviously at the core it's me, Rose and Bobby and the changing alliances with all that. But then every scene is peppered with an all-star. We start with Joel [McHale], we come back to him and we get [Jason] Mantzoukas, we've got Josh Charles, Jane [Krakowski], Julie White, Celia Weston — every scene has this other element that comes in to ruffle feathers.

Doing a climactic scene waist-deep in water has got to be a challenge.
No joke, the heater was not working. And it was eight degrees outside and snowing. It doesn't sound bad when you say it, but it was about 65, 70 degrees in the pool. Normally when you go swimming it's 85 degrees in a pool. It helped the performances, since we're supposed to be afraid of the water. When you pan around and see the other kids in the pool, there's a couple little girls with straight-up blue lips.

Preview. These 'Boots' were made for dancing

Broadway hit "Kinky Boots" is a lot tamer than you might think, swears Lindsay Nicole Chambers, who plays love interest Lauren in the touring production.

"It's 'kinky' meaning fabulous and different. It's the British interpretation of the word," Chambers says. "It's not as risque as it sounds — my 87-year-old grandmother came to see it."

The show, with music by Cyndi Lauper and book by Harvey Fierstein, tells the story of Charlie Price, who inherits his father's failing shoe factory. He needs to find a way to starting selling shoes stat, before he has to fire the workers.

Chambers' character convinces Charlie to go out on a limb. "She challenges him to change the product," Chambers says. "All the other factories are staying alive by finding a niche market. He needs to, too."

Charlie heads to London, where he meets Lola, a drag queen with a broken heel — and has his "Eureka!" moment: He's going to start making shoes for drag queens, otherwise known as kinky boots.

"Kinky Boots" is at the Forrest Theatre tonight through May 10. Tickets are at www.telecharge.com. / MATTHEW MURPHY

But the conservative factory town gets turned on its head, as towns do, by Lola's arrival.

"There is a message to the show. It is about accepting people's differences — but it's not a beat-you-over-the-head-with-it message," Chambers says. "It's just a fun night. I've had so many husbands come up to me after the show and say, 'My wife dragged me here — and it's the best thing I've ever seen.'" RACHEL VIGODA

In costume

Rocking those shoes

"Spoiler alert: Every last one of us in the finale is in a pair of kinky boots," says Chambers with a laugh. "You do get to see a football player-sized man dancing around in a pair of thigh-high 6-inchers."

The shoes were custom made for each dancer, and Chambers says her "sensible little 6-inch red python stiletto booties" are surprisingly comfortable.

As for the guys, they got used to the heels pretty quickly — after a bit of a rough start. "It's funny because girls, we're always in heels," Chambers says. "But these dudes come in — and we're talking intense heels. When they started rehearsing, there was definitely some whining. And some crying."

Parenting beyond love

Jenny Lexhed on how she almost lost herself to her son's autism.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us

Parenting an autistic child requires more effort, but it's important not to sacrifice your own health in the process. ISTOCK

The title of Jenny Lexhed's parenting memoir, "Love Is Not Enough," is a difficult one for parents to grasp. But those coming to terms with raising an autistic child will understand it immediately.

"Love is the foundation when you have a child," she explains. "But love is not enough to raise a child with autism. You have to understand, You have to educate yourself and how you can meet your child in the right way and help them learn and develop."

The book, already a best-seller in her native Sweden and recently released in the U.S., recounts a struggle in which the stakes were as high for her as they were for her son Lucas, now 17.

She describes getting the diagnosis — a difficult process in itself in the late '90s — as "falling into a big black hole, because there is so much to take in and learn." It also came at a difficult time for her family: Her husband had just started a company, which meant she was mostly alone with Lucas. "I saw [his condition] as my responsibility."

Having little time during the day, Lexhed began staying up all night researching autism and creating her own educational materials for Lucas, who faced a long wait getting into the special programs he needed. The feeling of "fighting against a clock" drove her on.

But the only thing more difficult than trying to manage an autistic child is doing it without help. Eventually, the drive to help her son not only consumed all of Lexhed's days, but herself, too: She suffered a nervous breakdown that left her hospitalized in 2001. A study she later read found that parents with special-needs children have higher rates of depression and burnout; mothers to children with autism were found to have the same level of stress as combat soldiers, which didn't surprise her. "It's a constant challenge, every day," she says.

She credits her recovery with learning to care for herself by leading a balanced life, including exercising, getting enough sleep, making time for relaxation and reaching out for help.

Lexhed describes how working to understand Lucas honed her into a highly specialized detective: "What is so frustrating about being an autism parent is that you feel inadequate so many times. Your child can be screaming and you don't know why — are they in pain? What's happening?"

It can be difficult to resist the temptation of opting out; it's often the easiest choice. But increased attention — April is Autism Awareness Month — helps, and she encourages parents to make the effort.

"Initially it's really tough to do new things, but then when you can overcome that, you can have the benefits and the joy," she says.

"Love is the foundation when you have a child. But love is not enough to raise a child with autism. You have to understand, you have to educate yourself and how you can meet your child in the right way and help them learn and develop."

Jenny Lexhed

How to make a new experience enjoyable

Plan ahead: If you have to break with your daily routine, let your child know what is happening and explain why.

Make an itinerary: Even if you're going somewhere familiar, there can be an issue. Being clear — "We're going to this place to do these things" — can settle their anxieties and manage their expectations.

Take it slow: When Lexhed and her husband wanted to share their love of skiing with Lucas, they started by having him wear the ski boots in their home. Then they slowly pulled him around on skis in their backyard. Once they got to the slopes, the ski lift posed a problem at first, but once aboard, "he sees it's not that bad and we can manage this together."

Spell out the rules clearly: Autistic children may seem to want to be by themselves, but Lexhed says often they simply don't know how to participate: "My son loves to play with others — if he understands the game."

Manage the reaction: Try to explain your child's condition and that he has trouble with new situations.

Take care of yourself: Finding a way to relax isn't selfish. "Even a short walk by yourself can be a moment of relaxation. You think it's a luxury you can't afford, but a moment for yourself here and there really helps you re-energize so you can be a good parent."

When it comes to wellness, celebrities are just like us

Even the uber-famous can slack on fitness, says A-list trainer Valérie Orsoni.

Valérie Orsoni is famously mum about her clientele. MIKEL HEALEY PHOTOGRAPHY

letters@metro.us

"I don't even need to work; I really do it out of passion for well-being," starts Valérie Orsoni.

The San Francisco-based celebrity trainer has made a name for herself training — although she would never confirm their identities — A-list Hollywood stars, rumored to include the likes of Jennifer Aniston, Demi Moore, Jennifer Lopez and Kim Kardashian.

Orsoni developed her method after putting on weight following her parents' divorce. Between the ages of 15 and 18, she tried all the diets she could find: 42 in total, according to her. To find one that actually worked, she created a mash-up of all of them.

Her method is not about starving yourself, cutting out entire food groups or extreme exercise routines. And yet, her clients aren't always on board. "Some of them are really motivated but easily crack for food," she says. "While some of them always find excuses, and I hate excuses. Especially when they pretend to be tired when they were up all night partying under the eyes of the paparazzi."

It was dealing with the excuses that gave the fitness expert new ideas about keeping them motivated, which she shares in her new book, "Le BootCamp Diet," out today. "One of them told me that she couldn't be bothered putting on her gym clothes in the morning. I told her to sleep in them!"

On the other hand, you also have the "well-behaved," who wake up at 4:30 a.m. to work out and wouldn't dare to put French fries in their mouth. There is also a secret motivator no one really likes to admit: the rivalry with a competitor, either for a role or for a partner, which can definitely help them get out of bed. "They want to be skinnier than their ex-boyfriend's new flame," the coach laughs.

To help her famous clients tackle the extra pounds before shooting a film or walking the red carpet, Orsoni makes them go on a detox, eating "mostly plants and seafood — not fried, of course. It's a mix of low-GI [glycemic index] and alkalizing food like papaya, pineapple, berries, nectarines and sprouted seeds and nuts, which will also give them glowing skin."

She also sometimes prescribes an infrared sauna session every day, to improve circulation.

In the long run, however, she wouldn't recommend cutting any food. "My program is based on no guilt. I think depriving yourself just makes you more likely to compensate afterwards and put the weight back on." We'd all happily stick to that rule.

Birch juice

Birch water is the new super drink, but birch juice has been used in the cosmetics and the wellness industry for some time. Natural cosmetic brand Weleda (weleda.com) has a dedicated line because of birch water's detoxifying properties. With a juice to add to your water and drink throughout the day, an exfoliating shower gel and a massage oil, this line claims to help cleanse your system and refine your skin, including reducing cellulite.

For centuries, birch water has been valued for its medicinal properties everywhere the tree grows. CC SAABY

Birch is the latest plant water turning healthy heads.

ELODIE NOEL, MWN
letters@metro.us

Naturally flavored waters are so hot, there's a new trendy flavor every couple of months. What began with coconut has gone on to include maple then aloe vera waters, because of the natural refreshment from plants and their ability to hydrate and detoxify.

Now, there's a newcomer having its moment in Europe: birch water.

A natural beverage drunk for centuries, it's actually birch sap, which is extracted from the tree between the months of March and April. It's then pasteurized to preserve it for sale all year long.

Until recently, birch water was only consumed for a couple of weeks following its harvest, as a "detox" plan to enter spring revived and refreshed.

"Birch sap has been used as a kind of medicinal drink for centuries," says Alice Mackintosh, a nutrition consultant based in London.

A traditional beverage in Russia, Baltic and Scandinavian countries, as well as France, Scotland and parts of northern China — everywhere you can find the tree, basically — birch water is used in folk medicine to help revitalize the body and cure kidney, lung and stomach diseases.

It's also a source of minerals like potassium, calcium and magnesium. In addition, it contains saponin, which Mackintosh says has been shown to reduce cholesterol and has an anti-inflammatory effects. "It does have some nutritional benefits, but it's definitely not the answer to everyone's issues, even though, like coconut water, it's marketed that way," she cautions. "There need to be more serious studies to show any real effect."

There's no harm in drinking birch water now and then as a supplement, but you won't see any benefits if your diet isn't healthy, too. And if you feel like you need a cleanse, Mackintosh advises sticking to the vitamin- and mineral-packed powerhouse of a green juice with kale, celery, avocado and cucumber.

Nepal, Beckham party in sharp contrast

I think it's a sad world when you read about the utter devastation in Nepal on one page, and David Beckham's ultra-lavish 40th birthday party on the next. It is such a backwards world where thousands, if not millions, of dollars are spent on parties with fancy food, alcohol, and entertainment while people die from lack of simple water and food. I cannot understand how people isolate themselves so completely from the dire needs of their fellow human beings.

Enough debt

The national debt has increased over $7 trillion from $11 trillion to a record $18.2 trillion over the past seven years under President Obama with nothing to show for it. The debate has already begun in Washington as part of the looming 2016 federal budget negotiations between the president and Congress about permitting our national debt to grow even more. What's another trillion or two between friends? Isn't it time Washington destroyed its credit cards and lived within its means just like you and I?

MACNOW: EAGLES WILL TRADE UP ON DRAFT DAY

Strap yourself in, Eagles fans. The roller coaster goes full throttle this week.

Millions of words have been printed and billions of gallons of hot air spewed analyzing whether Chip Kelly will be able to draft Marcus Mariota, his star pupil from Oregon. On Thursday evening, we'll know.

Clearly, it's the outcome Eagles fans crave. We haven't been this starry-eyed about a potential pick since Ricky Williams in 1999.

And I get it. Few of us really believe that Sam Bradford is the long-term answer at quarterback. I'm not even sure he's the short-term answer. I recently bet a friend that the QB who starts the most games for the Eagles in 2015 will be … Mark Sanchez.

While I think too many around here have falsely elevated Mariota to Andrew Luck status, I'd love to see Kelly get him. Every NFL coach deserves the QB he wants, and no one is more comfortable running this system than Mariota.

But I just don't see it happening. Moving from Pick 20 to the top of the draft is daunting. Doing it when there are teams with the same intent that pick higher than you (hello, San Diego), makes it virtually impossible.

So what's going to happen? Here's my shot-in-the-dark prediction. In fact, I do believe the Eagles will trade up.

Except I expect Tampa Bay will surprise everyone by taking Mariota with the top pick of the draft, bypassing Florida State QB Jameis Winston. While every mousse-haired draft analyst has Winston going first, we've heard virtually nothing indicating that from the Bucs.

Opinion

GLEN MACNOW

REALGLENMACNOW

Glen Macnow has been an outspoken voice in Philly sports for nearly three decades.

I read an article last week where Milwaukee Sentinel NFL reporter Bob McGinn surveyed 19 NFL personnel execs and found that most prefer Mariota to Winston. Nine of the 19 predicted stardom for Mariota, just six said the same for Winston. And, while only one forecast Mariota as a disappointment or bust, eight took Winston down that JaMarcus Russell road to ruin.

Macnow on the draft

"I expect Tampa Bay will surprise everyone by taking Mariota with the top pick of the draft."

I'm not sure where Lovie Smith registered on that survey. But my hunch is the Bucs coach grabs Mariota and saves himself the headaches.

Which means, for Eagles fans, the drama will be over by about 8:15 p.m. What happens then?

Predicting what Chip will do is like predicting which way squirrels will run in traffic. But I'll give it a shot. Kelly spoke recently about last year's draft — in which the Eagles missed on players they targeted and wound up trading down. He suggested that he has no reluctance about moving up, if the price is right.

Everyone assumed he was talking about Mariota. But I see another possibility. I've seen dozens of mock drafts, and most have Michigan State cornerback Trae Waynes going between Picks 11 and 18. If, in fact, Waynes moves into affordable territory — say, Pick 13 — watch for Kelly to trade up and grab a talented prospect to solidify his secondary.

It's not as sexy as Mariota, but it is more realistic. And, hey, you could learn to love the guy.

Temple to tip off at Veterans Classic

The Temple men's basketball team does not want to miss the NCAA tournament for a third year, and are scheduling an early test as the school announced it would begin the 2015-16 season in the Veterans Classic Showcase at the U.S. Naval Academy on Nov. 13. The Owls will open against the North Carolina Tar Heels at 7 p.m. that night, with Florida and Navy facing off in the second game.

News you need to know

Is Kendricks on the block?

Noticeably absent from the Eagles' offseason workouts, there is no way of knowing if Chip Kelly and the Birds intend to trade linebacker Mychal Kendricks. But the man himself claims he missed camp due to a "scheduled trip" to Costa Rica.

With Kiko Alonso, another young and promising inside linebacker with the team after the LeSean McCoy trade and DeMeco Ryans re-signed, there is a logjam at the position.

"I can tell you how it affects the linebacker room: It puts better players in one room," Kendricks said on the NFL Network. "We're stacked now. What does it mean for me? I'm not too sure. But I know that I will just do what got me here. That's all I can do is just do everything that is asked of me and play my butt off." EVAN MACY

Brown likely to make return this week

The Phillies could get more depth in the outfield when Domonic Brown finishes his 20-day rehab assignment at Triple-A Wednesday.

But it's not exactly an embarrassment of riches for the Phillies, as Brown has gone just 4-for-31 (.129) with a double, four walks and six strikeouts in eight games in Lehigh Valley. When he emerges from the DL, he could be optioned to the Iron Pigs, or could replace struggling Grady Sizemore (.133, 4-for-30) on the roster.

UFC's Jones facing felony

The light-heavyweight champion is in some trouble.

UFC's Jon Jones, as of Monday afternoon has yet to turn himself in on charges of leaving the scene of a crime, a felony charge that potentially carries jail time, according to sources.

The fighter allegedly hit a 25-year-old pregnant woman with his car in Albuquerque, New Mexico on Sunday morning, injuring her arm.

According to the police report, witnesses saw a man fitting Jones' description leave the silver SUV that struck the woman's vehicle before stopping and returning to the car to grab a "large handful of cash."

Law enforcement officials have been unable to make contact with him. He is scheduled to defend his title in UFC 187 on May 23.
